General Description of the Parkeville Hydropathic Institute. The main building is three stories high, standing back from the street about one hundred feet, with a semicircular grass plot in front, and contains thirty to forty rooms. The grounds around the house are tastefully laid out with walks and planted with trees, shrubs, &c. On the left of the entrance to these grounds is a cottage containing four rooms, used by male patients as a bathing house, with every convenience for "packing," bathing, &c.; on the right of the entrance, about two hundred feet distant, stands a similar cottage, used by the ladies for similar purposes.

In the rear of the Institute, at the distance of one hundred feet, are three other cottages, some eighty feet apart. One of these is the laundry, with a hydrant at the door; the other two are occupied by the servants.

The hydrant water is introduced into these cottages as well as into the main building, and all the waste water carried off by drains under ground.

well as into the main building, and all the waste water carried off by drains under ground.

THE WATER WORES

Consist of a circular stone building, standing on the brow of a hill, surmounted by a large codar reservoir containing five hundred barrels, brought from a never-failing spring of pure cold water in the side of the hill, by "a hydraulic ram," a self-acting machine of east iron, that is kept constantly going, night and day, by the descent of the water from the spring. The surplus water is carried from the reservoir to a fountain in the water-works yard, surrounded by weeping willows. In the first story of the water-works is a circular room, containing the douche bath, which is a stream falling from a height of about thirty feet, and can be varied in size from half an inch to an inch and a half in diameter. Adjoining the douche countries a dressing room, with marble tables, &c.; the rising douche (for the cure of piles, &c.) is one of the most complete contrivances of the kind, being entirely under the control of the patient using the same.

There are many other appliances, which can be better understood by a personal examination.

To Persons out of Employment. NEW PICTORIAL WORKS,

Just published by R. SKARS, and for sale at No. 128
Nassau street, New York.

A MERICAN GIFT BOOKS FOR 1851.—Agents are wanted to circulate the following new and beautiful works, (retail price, $2 50 per vol.) A new and complete PICTORIAL HISTORY OF CHINA AND INDIA; with a descriptive account of those countries and their inhabitants, from the earliest period of authentic history to the present time. In which the editor has treated not only of the historical events, but also of the manners, customs, religion, literature, and domestic habits of the people of those immense empires.

The embellishments are about two hundred, and of the first order, illustrating whatever is peculiar to the inhabitants, regarding their dress, domestic occupations, their mode of agriculture, commercial pursuits, arts, &c. They are accurate, and each one has been made expressly for the work.

The volume forms a large octave, containing between five and six hundred pages, printed in the best style, and on good substantial white paper. It is furnished to agents, handsomely bound in muslin, gitt, or leather, as the purchaser may prefer, at a very liberal discount, when quantities of not less than twenty copies are ordered at one time. PICTORIAL HISTORY OF CHINA AND INDIA;

tilies of not less than twenty copies are ordered at one time.

THRILLING INCIDENTS OF THE WARS OF THE UNITED STATES; comprising the most striking and remarkable events of the Revolution, the French war, the Tripolitan war, the Indian war, the second war with Great Britain, and the Mexican war; with three hundred engravings! Retail price, $2 50 per volume. Orders respectfully solicited.

SEARS PICTORIAL FAMILY PUBLICATIONS are decidedly the best books that agents can possibly employ their time in supplying to the people of the United States. They are valuable for reference, and should be possessed by every family in this great republic. There is not a city or town in these United States, not even those of small importance, but contains many citizens to whom these works are indispensable. They are adapted to the literary wants of the Christian, the patriot, the statesman, and the domestic circle, got up in a superior style of art and workmanship; and are not only such books as will sell, but are such as an agent of good principle will feel free to recommend, and willing to see the purchaser again after they have been bought.

Our PLAX.—The plan the publisher has so successfully carried out for several years, is the obtaining responsible men as agents, who are well known in their own counties, owns, and villages, and have time and disposition to circulate good and instructive books among their neighbors and friends. Any person wishing to embark in the enterprise will risk little in sending $25 or $50, for which he will receive an assortment as he may direct, at the whole-sale cash prices.

Enterprising and active men of respectability and good rill receive an assortment as he may direct, as the allowed allowed and cash prices.

Enterprising and active men of respectability and good iddress, would do well to engage in the sale of the above rolumes; and all postmasters, clergymen, book pedlars, and newspaper agents, are respectfully requested to act so our agents. A handsome remuneration allowed to all who engage in their sale. For particulars address, post paid,

To publishers of newspapers throughout the United States:
Newspapers copying this advertisement entire, without any alteration or abridgment, (including this notice,) and giving it a few inside insertions, shall receive a copy of any of our $2 50 or $3 works, subject to their order, by sending direct to the publisher.

In the Fifth Annual Report of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, for the year 1850, we find, in the report of Professor JEWETT upon the affairs of the library, the following remarks relative to the appropriateness of our city for the location of such an establishment as the Smithsonian Institution. We quote them with much approbation: "The experience of the last year would seem to decide the question of the appropriateness of this location for such an institution. An establishment like this must have a fixed position somewhere. Yet its benefits are for all; not for one city nor one section of country, nor one nation even, but for 'MANKIND.' It is not to be denied that a large city, like New York, or Philadelphia, or Boston, offers many advantages for the operations of such an institution not possessed by this city. It is, nevertheless, almost beyond question that the comparison of advantages is in favor of this very place. There is no spot which presents so many attractions for the class of men most immediately interested in its concerns; no city which they more gladly visit. The high officers of state and the foreign diplomatic corps reside here. Here are held the sessions of Congress. Here are the executive departments of the Government, the Patent Office, the Office of the Coast Survey, and the Observa-tory. Every man, throughout the whole extent of the land, feels that here he has a friend-a representative—through whom he may commu-nicate with such an establishment, when he cannot visit it in person. The facilities for the kind of intercourse which we need with other countries are, by the help of the State Department and of foreign ministers, greater than at any other point. More than all, the establishment here possesses a character of nationality which would not elsewhere attach to its movements in the eyes of our own people and of foreigners. This it was, undoubtedly, which led its founder to direct that the Institution should be established in Washington. Besides all this, it is enabled to multiply its influence and usefulness, by acting in concert with the departments of the National Government.

"The inhabitants of a city where such an institution is established must, of necessity, share more largely in its benefits than others more remote. It is gratifying to know that this advantage could fall nowhere more appropriately, more benignly, or less invidiously, than upon this city. Selected and planned as for the seat of government of a mighty empirea spot where nature laid her hand most gracefully-Washington has not hitherto been able, like her sister cities, to gather from commerce wealth for the endowments of learning. From the nature of our political institutions, she has been deprived, too, of that fostering munificence which in Europe has reared splendid capitals from the sandy plain or sunken morass, and supplied them not only with all that can meet the convenience and gratify the taste of their the convenience and gratify the taste of their inhabitants, but also with Universities, Scientific Societies, and Libraries, for the advancement of civilization, refinement, and human

A Sacred Melody.

If you bright stars which gem the night lie each a blissful dwelling sphere, Where kindred spirits re-unite Whom death hath torn asunder here, How sweet it were at once to die, And leave this blighted orb afar—Mix soul with soul, to cleave the sky, And soar away from star to star.

But oh! how dark, how drear, how lone Would seem the brightest world of bliss, If, wandering through each radiant one, We failed to find the loved of this! We failed to find the less should twine
If there no more the ties should twine
Which death's cold hand alone can sever, Ah! then these stars in mockery shine, More hateful as they shine forever.

It cannot be!—each hope and fear That brights the eye or clouds the brow, Proclaims there is a happier sphere Than this bleak world that holds us now! There is a voice which sorrow hears,
When heaviest weighs life's gailing chain;
'Tis Heaven that whispers "dry thy tears—
The pure in heart shall meet again!"

> A TALE OF THE TIMES.
> BY C. WARREN.

At the period when our story commences, Aaron Ridgely was a worthy mechanic—a mas-ter workman: upright in all his dealings, prompt to redeem his promises, and possessing the esteem and confidence of all who knew him With good health, plenty of work, and a round sum laid up for a rainy day, he was an object of envy to his fellow mechanics. But we have not enumerated all the blessings which a bountiful Providence had showered upon him. He was the husband of a beautiful wife, and the father of a lovely babe. These were his household duties: morning and evening he paid them his sincere worship, and sought for no higher joys than were to be found in his own little mestic circle.

Do you believe it possible that the tempter of souls can convert this pure love of a husband and father into his bitterest curse? Time will show; but, in the mean time, his cup of happiness seemed to be full, and he had all that heart could wish. But one thing was wanting; while his heart was overflowing with the most ardent affection for his dear ones, he forgot to give God thanks. Ridgely was not naturally a selfish man. Be fore the birth of his darling Ellen, he was free handed and generous to a fault. The widow and orphans knew him for a friend. The unfortunate never sought for aid in vain. The smiles and kind words which invariably accompanied his charitable deeds cheered many a drooping spirit, and bound the hearts of the desolate to himself by the strongest ties of love and gratitude. But soon after his beloved Matilda became a mother, a change came over him. It was gradual, but not the less thorough and decided. The pleasant smiles that were wont to play constantly about his lips were soon no more. He became thoughtful, absent-minded, and even morose. His brow was contracted, and his eye was stern, as though some dominant, fixed purpose had taken possession of his soul. ever that purpose was, it seemed to have ex-cluded every kind and generous feeling—now, when the destitute applied to him for charity, he would always hesitate, and often send then away unaided.

liis comrades, when they approached him, as of old, with jokes and a ringing laugh, were quickly repelled by his gloomy and lowering looks. And they would ask each other, "What is the matter with poor Ridgely? Once, none so merry as he; now he has not a word to throw to a dog." He loved his wife most dearly; but instead of sitting happily by her side; hour

AMERICAN TELEGRAPH after hour, as he used to do, lavishing upon her every endearing attention, he would now draw himself moodily into a corner, and indulge in unsocial meditation upon some absorbing topic. And "what was the matter with poor Ridgely?" Did the world go ill with him? Was there any cloud overshadowing his future, to dampen his spirits and dim his hopes? No! His prospects were brighter than ever before, and he was every day adding to the little store reserved for times of sickness or trouble. His wife could not fail to observe the change, and often she wished to draw the unhappy secret from his bosom, but her husband's forbidding looks and gloomy sternness frightened her from the effort. At length, when her heart was almost bursting with anxious forebodings, she came to his side one evening as he sat moodily silent and alone. She gazed for a moment upon his frowning brow, and then gave way to a flood of tears, and hid her face in his bosom.

Aaron's heart was touched—he raised his wife's head tenderly, kissed away her tears, and anxiously asked the cause of her sorrow. We will not detail the conversation which ensued; suffice it to say, that Ridgely confided all to the wife of his bosom, and harmony and confidence were again restored.

And what do you imagine had clouded the open brow and sealed up the generous heart of our hero? The demon AVARICE had entered his manly breast. Not for himself did he wish for wealth, but he would heap up gold for his darling child: give him a few more years of life, and she should be forever secured against the fear of want. Was not this a worthy object to live and labor for? Far from trying to dissuade him from his purpose, his wife entered eagerly into the scheme, and strengthened his resolve. They would deny themselves all self-gratification, and sacrifice every indulgence. They would toil in hours usually devoted to recreation; and thus they would practise the strictest economy, and exhaust every energy, until the phantom poverty should be forever banished from the eyes of their daughter. And was not this a glorious generosity—a noble example of self sacrificing devotion? And they did toil with an energy that knew no weariness-growing prematurely old, and haggard with excessive care: they carefully husbanded their gains, and even stinted the necessary supplies of their own household. Prosperity attended their every step. They rapidly grew rich. But domestic felicity was a stranger to their hearth. They had no time now to spend in the sweet communion of hearts, and in cultivating the social virtues. Every hour must be coined. They attended the public observances of religion, but the rest of the holy hours of the Sabbath were

Years passed on. Ridgely had reached the first limit he had set to his labors—he was comparatively rich; but avarice had grown stronger in his bosom, and took a wider scope. His daughter, their only child, a beautiful and promising girl, should be the heiress to a landed estate, and should move in a higher circle than he had ever aspired to. To accomplish this object he purchased land in a Western State, and moved thither with his wife and child. And here too, though he sought not the field and to get in, whoever he was, or he wouldn't have paratively rich; but avarice had grown stronger child. And here too, though he sought not the favor of Heaven, yet God prospered him. Wealth to get in, whoever he was, or he wouldn't have flowed in. His property increased in value far kept up such a tremendous racket. By and by beyond his expectations. His neighbors wondered at his prosperity, and began to envy his riches, but he was not beloved. Years devoted to hoarding gold had contracted his heart, palsied every generous feeling, and remoulded his selections. The homosplant and frage to you? Says he, 'She does.' But in the midst of his success and his golden schemes, there came a solemn warning from Heaven, and the death-knell resounded in his cars. The partner of his cares, not of his joys, for he had none now, was summoned from the world where her heart and treasures were.

Since the time when she had joined with her husband in the absorbing pursuit of wealth, she had risen early and eaten the bread of sor row; she had led a wearisome and self-denying life: but it was not that her charities might diffuse joy and gladness among the homes of the destitute. The Angel of Death found her devoutly engaged in the worship of Mammon, and purried her soul, without a moment's preparation, into the presence of Him who has said, Ye cannot serve two masters."

Ridgely appeared for a time heart-broken at the loss of his wife; for he had loved her dearly, and hoped to rejoice with her in old age over the result of their joint labors. But he collected all his energics, and directed them, with tenfold intensity, to the accomplishment of the task which had become the business of his life. His affections entered the more strongly upon his only child, now blooming into womanhood, The highest ambition was to see his darling Ellen the possessor of boundless wealth, courted, marry the devil's daughter. "The law does flattered, and envied.

THE BLOOMER PEDESTRIAN .- On a mixed trip, say a fourth on business and the balance in fun, we found ourselves on Thursday, as the Arsenal bell struck for feeding time, timing the Bloomer on her mile, and very respectable time she can make when she chooses to put both her best legs foremost. Yesterday, however, from some reason best known to herself, she did not put in her best licks, but although scemingly walking slow, she passed into her little snuggery under the sixteen minutes.

During our stay, she did not dazzle our optics with her richest dress, but walked in a plainer dress, although strictly in accordance to the Bloomer doctrines. Marine blue tunic, with first buff and then white silk trousers, a la Turque, neat gaiter boots, and white hat trimmed with pink ribbon. She carefully concealed her face under a black veil; and when prying eyes came too near the ropes, she pulled one of er fifty ringlets across her face, so as to ren-

"THE BLACK SWAN."-This new musical character is duly puffed in the Buffalo papers. The Courier says: "Miss Greenfield's concert last evening filled Townsend Hall to overflowing with one of the most fashionable audiences of the season, and her songs were most enthusiastically applieded and encored. She has a truly wonderful voice; and the manner in which she sang some of her pieces was indeed surprising, considering the comparatively small amount of cultivation she has had.

The Express observes that Parodi and her as ociates had sung in the same hall on Monday evening "to half a house," and adds:

Jenny Lind has never drawn a better house as to character, than that which listened, with evident satisfaction, to this unheralded and al-most unknown African Nightingale. Curiosity did something for her, but not all. She has merit—very great merit; and, with cultivation, (instruction.) she will rank among the very first vocalists of the age. She has a voice of great sweetness and power, with a wider range from the lowest to the highest notes than we have listened to; flexibility is not wanting, and her control of it is beyond example for a new and untaught vocalist. Her performance was re-ceived with marked approbation and applause from those who know what to applaud."

THE BLACK SWAN .- The Richmond Enquirer learns from a barber on Governor street that the "Black Swan" (Eliza Green) is a native of Richmond, and daughter of Hope Butler, a quondam famous "trainer" of race-horses on the Henrico and Chesterfield courses, now residing in Buffalo. While in Richmond, she was a skilful prima donna of the "African Church" choir, and changed her name by marrying a "colored gentleman" at the North, yelept Green.

A specimen of the genus "Hoosier" was found by Captain -, of the steamer , in the engine-room of his boat, while lying at Louisville, one fine morning in June. The captain inquired what he was doing there.
"Have you seen Captain Perry?" was the interrogative response.

"Don't know him; and can't tell what that has to do with your being in my engine-room,' replied the captain angrily.
"Hold on, that's just what I was getting at.

You see Capt. Perry asked me to take a drink, and so—I did; I knew that I wanted a drink, or I shouldn't have been so very dry. So Captain Perry and I went to the ball. Captain the rest of the holy hours of the Sabbath were spent in calculating their gains, and in laying plans for the future. They turned a deaf ear to the petitions of distress, and referred the fatherless to the "God of the fatherless."
